So what exactly is Honeydew?

Black beech (fuscospora solandri) forests attract aphids (sensoriaphis nothofagi) which digest the mineral dense sap on the native tree bark for protein building blocks and amino acids. They then secrete a concentrated sugar-like substance on the trees which sparkles in the sunlight, hence the name "honeydew". Orohaki bees love the readily available food source and feed on it to culminate it into an absolutely spectacular and delicious end product. Orohaki Honeydew is uniquely different not only in flavour and texture but in nutritional properties from regular honey made from flower blossom nectar
